FRED MITCHELL
A TEAM BUILDER

"The success of the Chicago Cubs under Fred Mitchell's management has positively proved that an architect of a bungalow is not an architect of a palace," writes Ted Sullivan in the Cincinnati Enquirer. "Here was an unknown man, who was considered only a lieutenant of George Stallings in guiding the Boston Braves, goes to Chicago and patches up the heritage—in the way of playing material of Evers, O'Day, Bresnahan and Tinker—bequeathed to him. He molds all of this material into a team that looms up as a factor in the final disposition of the National League pennant. Should the end of the season bring the Chicago Nationals ahead of the Braves, ninety per cent of the baseball public will think that Mitchell was the power behind the throne in making the Braves a post season pennant winner."

"A leader and constructor of ball teams is born not manufactured, coached or press made, no matter what tutelage he was under. No man can duplicate the personality of another. We even find the assertion demonstrated in one man trying to tell another man's story. The changing of the manner of telling the story loses its flavor in the way it is told. So it is in the handling of a ball team. Some men have not the force of a butterfly in impressing their players with orders. There are other managers who can tell you how the game should be played in all its strategy, and can also tell you how the game could be won after it is lost."

"You may term this kind of men before-thought and after-thought managers. They have all the theory of winning and losing in their heads, but while the contest is in action they give their brains a vacation."

"Pat Moran for two years has made all the star managers of the National League—with all their financial backing—come in behind him in the National League race. October may find Mitchell low in the race, but the baseball public will give him credit of being a team builder and a man of practical baseball knowledge."

PHOTOS OF DEDICATORY SERVICES ARE BARRED

(By Associated Press)
 LONDON, Eng. — Photographers were forbidden to take pictures of the scenes incident to the dedicatory services at St. Paul's Cathedral in honor of the entry of the United States into the war, a fact which has aroused the indignation of newspaper and photographers. Press photographers who attended the ceremonies were placed on their honor not to take pictures of any feature of the service, either inside or outside St. Paul's cathedral. The only picture of the King and Queen was secured by an amateur photographer who was concealed behind a chimney on the roof of a building alongside the parade route.

The Press Photographers' Association has passed resolutions expressing indignation at the action of the authorities.
